Halfway To Hell - The Workers & Unions That Built The Golden Gate Bridge

30 minute documentary (1988) Narrated by Bay Area actor Danny Glover

It recounts the tremendous work that went into building the bridge through the voices of the workers who did the job. Using footage from the 1930's, we watch and hear the workers as they build one of the greatest construction monuments in the world. It also integrates the role of unions and the San Francisco General Strike into the picture.

The Golden Gate Bridge was the first 100% union bridge in the Bay Area and during the construction of this bridge, many unions established union dispatch halls that exist today. The film has been programmed on KQED Channel 9 and has won awards as well as being programmed on other PBS stations around the country.

Hanging Iron, After The Quake of '89

30 minute documentary (1990)

This video recounts the story of the Loma Prieta Earthquake, which struck the Bay Area on October 17, 1989. It shows how organized labor played a major role in saving lives on the collapsed Cypress Freeway and in rebuilding the collapsed section of the East Bay Span of the San Francisco Bay Bridge in only 30 days. It is the story of two unions in particular-the Iron Workers and Operating Engineers who worked around the clock to get the Bay Area back on its feet.

The Labor Video Project is making both videos into one DVD for Iron Workers and Building Trades Workers in a special offer for $15.00 (S&H included). Part of the proceeds will go to the Alfred Zampa Memorial Bridge Foundation. For 5 or more copies $10.00 each.
